Kimberly McNally, MN, RN, BCC, McNally & Associates

The healthcare landscape is changing at breakneck speed. Creating a culture of collaborative leadership between the board and chief executive officer is paramount to navigating the changes and ensuring hospitals/health systems continue to be strong and vital community assets. This board/CEO collaboration can inspire others to work in new and innovative ways. Governance coach Kimberly McNally will provide trustees with practical guidance on how to establish, build, and maintain an effective leadership partnership that strengthens the quality of governance and empowers the CEO to lead the organization. This session will cover:

- the different—but mutually interdependent—roles of the board and the CEO in this new landscape;
- clarifying mutual communication expectations and preferences to become a more effective leadership team; and
- how to put ideas into action in your organization.

The Future of Disruptive Innovation in Healthcare

Martin Makary, MD, Professor of Surgery and Health Policy, Johns Hopkins School of Medicine

Dr. Makary will discuss the new wave of value-based healthcare as he examines innovators, system-level and market changes, and other factors impacting the healthcare landscape. He'll provide a special focus on transparency, accountability, and the next generation of quality measures. He will also examine the question, "Are we living in an era of too much healthcare?" and explain how hospitals are downsizing and moving to outpatient and community services to prepare for the future. As an advocate for innovative medicine and patient safety, and creator of the surgical checklist, Dr. Makary will discuss the board's role in impacting quality and advancing a culture of safety in your hospitals.

10:45 A.M. BREAK

11 A.M. - NOON BREAKOUT STRATEGY SESSIONS

■ Creating the Conditions for Effective Board-Physician Relationships

Kimberly McNally, MN, RN, BCC, McNally & Associates

Engaging physicians effectively in hospital governance is essential. Whether serving as a voting board member or in some other leadership capacity, physicians bring a unique and highly valuable voice to hospital and health system governance. Transformation efforts that aim to improve quality and patient safety, achieve clinical integration, enhance affordability and value, and promote healthy communities, require a close partnership between hospital boards, executives, and physicians. Role clarity, communication agreements, and effective governance orientation are imperative. This session will offer practical guidance to boards to optimize the contribution of physicians to governance.

■ Diversity and Inclusion Evolution

Sujata Chaudhry, Founder and Chief Executive Officer, Tangible Development

Respecting the unique blend of different backgrounds, experiences, and perspectives within a team enables leaders to rely on diversity and inclusion to not only foster innovation, but to support organizational sustainability and viability. In this session, trustees will examine board diversity and inclusion as it relates to healthcare and the hospital's mission. After establishing a business case for diversity and inclusion based on data and recent studies, trustees will discover actionable tools and strategies to take back to your boardrooms and support your organizations.

■ Partners in Behavioral Health

Beth Lawyer, Director, North Star Behavioral Health, Citizen Advocates, Inc.

A vacant hospital-based nursing home is transformed to meet the soaring need for behavioral health and addiction services in a vast rural area. A pilot program holistically focuses on the physical health and well-being of people struggling with mental illness. Trustees will hear how these innovative initiatives demonstrate the anatomy of effective partnerships—how building collaborative relationships, integrating efforts, and leveraging resources are key as hospitals, health systems, and community-based organizations work together to identify and creatively meet health and social needs.

She will advance the discussion on affiliations and the evolution of systems from both the hospital and system perspective and show how these changes and challenges impact the role of local, regional, and corporate boards. When systems become mega-systems, what is lost and what is gained? Will some community hospitals successfully be able to “go it alone”? Ms. Swan will examine these forces and pressures of the healthcare environment and explain why it is imperative for trustees to have critical conversations on the transformation of governance.

She will provide leading practices in board self-assessment, including what to measure, how to use the results and create work plans for improvement, and how to build momentum and excitement for overall board improvement.

■ Hospitals as Bridges Out of Poverty

Michael Saccocio, Executive Director, Schenectady City Mission

How can walking a mile in a patient's shoes—on icy, unsafe sidewalks with a broken stroller and toddler in tow—help your hospital improve care and outcomes? Mike Saccocio shows trustees how understanding the “culture of poverty” can help hospitals better meet the needs of their most vulnerable populations. Trustees will hear how this model approach can strengthen their organization's collaborative efforts to address income, housing, transportation, and other barriers to achieving the highest level of health for everyone. He will also share details of unique boots-on-the-ground programs and community partnerships that are connecting under-served people to healthcare to change behaviors for a lifetime.

■ It Takes a County: Fulton County's Telehealth Pilot

Irina Gelman, MPH, DPM, PhDc, Director, Fulton County Public Health

A college student with a sore throat virtually visits the doctor from a campus kiosk at 2 a.m. A senior citizen stops into a county office building, logs on to a computer, shows a provider the cut on her hand, and is referred to urgent care for stitches. They are among thousands of residents in a mostly rural county who can be connected to healthcare by a telehealth pilot. This is just the beginning. Dr. Gelman will discuss the pilot—its goals, measurement, phases, and prospects for sustainability. She will also highlight the key role of hospitals and dozens of additional community partners to improve access and advance the health of county residents.

Tomorrow Will Change Even Faster Than Today

Jack Uldrich, Healthcare Futurist and Author

In five years, five months, or even five weeks, healthcare will look different from how it looks today. It's changing that rapidly. Is your board ready? Futurist Jack Uldrich examines how consumerism, technology, and unique partnerships will continue to disrupt the delivery of healthcare and how boards can help their hospitals get out in front of it. From Gen Z's expectations for healthcare on demand and "wearable" personal health data devices, to game-changers like chemical surgery, and new partnerships involving companies like Uber, Amazon, Berkshire Hathaway, Aetna, and more—Mr. Uldrich will help you gain the insight and foresight you need to lead your hospitals through change and plan strategically for a successful future.
